A Little More About Weiwei …

Weiwei's path has been defined by a profound journey through the diverse facets of human existence. She has experienced what it feels like to be trapped in energies of confinement and conformity, to lose one's connection to oneself, and to endure separation in its many forms.

She knows the deep sense of not truly being welcome from the very start—fragile, vulnerable, and searching for a place in this world. For many years, she lived the experience of not being able to be fully herself around others—of conforming, holding back, and losing parts of her own essence. She learned how painful it can be when even the heart–connection to other people seems to fade away.

And yet—even during times of deepest forgetting—there was something that was never entirely lost.

A quiet, unwavering remembrance.

The remembrance that, beyond all separation, there exists a connection that can never be destroyed. A connection to the greater whole—and, at the same time, to that immense, unique way in which the One expresses itself through every single being.

As a traveler between visible and invisible worlds and the landscapes of her own inner self, Weiwei has walked her own path through darkness, searching, loss, and remembrance. Step by step, she began to view her experiences not merely as suffering, but to transform them into a powerful medicine.

A medicine that does not stop at the boundaries of body, emotions, thoughts, words, or concepts—and that is free to transcend cultural and religious notions.

From her experiences, her deep inquiry, and her own journey of remembering, a unique form of guidance has emerged: a space where people can encounter themselves anew. For Weiwei, healing is not the pursuit of becoming someone else. Rather, it is a return to what has always been there beneath all the layers of conformity, hurt, fear, and forgetting.

Living consciously in the present moment, maintaining a deep connection to her inner self, and fostering a vibrant relationship with everything around her are not goals to be achieved one day. They are part of an ongoing evolutionary journey.

A journey of remembering.

A journey through the human experience.

A journey back home—

to one's own heart,

to one's own original nature,

and to that deep sense of connection

in which the One experiences itself as infinitely unique diversity.
